Realignment in Asia

TWO major events have taken place in East Asia which have a common feature — they both grow out of the rapprochement between China and the U.S. The first event is the startling news that North and South Korea have reached an agreement to preserve peace in that divided land, and the second is the selection of Kakuei Tanaka as the Chairman of Japan's Liberal-Democratic party and his country's next Prime Minister.

In the wake of the Asian realignment, a number of new elements stand out clearly. The first is America's desire to limit its commitments in East Asia after having reached an understanding with China. The U.S. presence in Korea will, therefore, be reduced. South Korea realized that the U.S. defence umbrella was about to be partly lifted and that it had to fend for itself. The road, therefore, was clear for negotiations with Pyongyang. And that capital recently gave up the hope of conquering South Korea by force, since it could no longer count on the support of China and the Soviet Union.

These powers have decided that confrontation with the United States over Korea is not worth it. Both fear each other more than they care for the fate of Korean unification. In view of this attitude, both President Park and Premier Kim Il Sung were determined to take their future into their own hands and embark on direct negotiations, to reduce tensions along the border, and to move forward in a yet unspecified way toward unification.

It is difficult to see how such entirely different political systems could reach an accommodation. But since this was recently done in Germany, it could be tried in Asia.

Another consequence of the Nixon "China policy" was the decline of Japan's outgoing Premier Eisaku Sato. He was not informed in advance of the Nixon visit to Peking and later came under heavy attack from his own party. It was argued that as long as he was Prime Minister, Japan could not make meaningful contact with Communist China. This, presumably, cost his protégé, Foreign Minister Fukuda, who supported Sato's policy on China, his chance to succeed his mentor.

Tanaka, who is a behemoth to the outgoing leadership, can chart a new course for Japan in world affairs. An aggressive man, trained the hard way in Japan's politics, Tanaka is not a member of that country's ruling elite class. He is expected to try to seek new and formal ties with Communist China; he will also reduce Japan's reliance on the U.S.

Tanaka's selection ushers in a new generation to Japan's leadership, a generation that was not actively engaged in either government or politics in World War II, and thus does not feel it bears responsibility for that past. On the contrary, the new leadership will want to position Japan's newly acquired position as one of the five great powers. An independent foreign policy will be one of its trade marks, as economic recovery and growth was that of previous governments.

A new era has begun therefore in East Asia. The U.S. is about to leave the region after twenty-five years of massive military and economic presence. A delicate new power relationship is slowly being formed between China, Japan and the Soviet Union. Among these powers, smaller Korea is also seeking her own identity. She may find it through reunification.

'The city is levelled' Saigon troops retake deserted Quang Tri

SAIGON (UPI) — South Vietnamese paratroopers and tankers, carrying a flag and a bottle of champagne, pushed into Quang Tri City yesterday and recaptured the only Saigon province capital to fall to North Vietnamese military sources said.

The 1,200 paratroopers and tankers set up a command post at Quang Tri's railroad station in mid-afternoon and then fanned out to adjacent residential and business districts, the sources said. Most of the North Vietnamese had withdrawn.

The bulk of the strike force stayed clear of the Quang Tri Citadel for fear of North Vietnamese troops possibly dug into the 19th Century fortress in the centre of the city, according to the sources.

A company of commandos that flew into Quang Tri Tuesday to scout out the city for the attack force moved cautiously through the citadel yesterday in a building-by-building search for Communists, the sources said. They added that the strike force and commando team had run into only light resistance so far.

Brandt due to accept Schiller's resignation

BONN — Chancellor Willy Brandt yesterday mulled over whether to accept or reject the resignation of his "super-minister" for economics and finance, Professor Karl Schiller.

Mr. Brandt is expected to announce the 61-year-old professor's resignation at a press conference he has called for tomorrow.

Government sources said Professor Schiller in a letter sent last Sunday asked to be relieved of his post, three days after the Cabinet overruled him and imposed monetary control measures to stanch an inflationary inflow of foreign funds.

Professor Schiller yesterday carried on as usual with his duties, ready to receive Soviet Foreign Trade Minister Nikolai Patolichev to sign West Germany's first trade agreement with the Soviet Union in eight years.

Meanwhile, the Swiss Government yesterday erected new barriers against an inflow of unwanted foreign capital by announcing three measures designed to complement steps already taken during the past eight days.

U.S. hijackers get $800,000

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuters). — A Boeing 737 airliner of Pacific Southwest Airlines carrying 81 passengers and five crew landed here yesterday after being hijacked on a flight between Sacramento and San Francisco.

An airline official said the two hijackers, who demanded parachutes and an $800,000 ransom, had expressed the intention of taking the plane to Russia over Alaska.

The plane landed at San Francisco airport shortly before noon local time and airline officials said they were ready to put the parachutes and money aboard.

After landing, the plane was jacked to a remote part of the airport runway for refuelling. Mr. Kissel said the hijackers had three weapons and used two shotguns to hold up the plane.

Later, an armoured car was driven up to the plane with the ransom money aboard.

The hijackers also made the condition that only one refuelling technician be allowed to approach the plane to refuel it.

Airline officials said the hijackers had given no indication they intended letting the passengers off before the plane took off again.

Amin gives P.L.O. Israeli residence

KAMPALA (Reuters). — President Idi Amin yesterday donated the house formerly occupied by the Israeli Ambassador here to the Palestine Liberation Organization (P.L.O.) for use as an office.

He announced the gift at a meeting at his home here with a five-member P.L.O. delegation. The last Israeli Ambassador to Uganda, Mr. Daniel Laor, returned to Israel after Uganda broke off diplomatic relations three months ago.

Amman-Cairo talks

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter Jordan's former Premier, Abdull-Monem Rifai, yesterday wound up his Cairo talks aimed at effecting a reconciliation between Egypt and Jordan. The results of the talks were unknown.

The Middle East News Agency said yesterday that Rifai and an aide will next take their reconciliation mission to Syria which severed relations with Amman following Jordan's crackdown on the terrorists last July.

Lebanon, Syria ask U.N. meeting

UNITED NATIONS (Reuters). — Lebanon and Syria have requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider Israel's refusal to release six Syrian and Lebanese officers taken prisoner in last month's raid on Lebanon, it was announced yesterday.

Observers said the Council was not expected to meet for at least 48 hours.

The requests, contained in separate letters to Council President Dr. Carlos Ortiz de Rozas, called for "a meeting of the Security Council" but did not characterize the request as urgent.

The Diplomatic Correspondent of The Post adds:

Jerusalem had reason to be hopeful last night that it would find support among Western members of the Council against any Syrian attempt to have sanctions imposed.

Foreign Minister Eban's ongoing talks with Western ambassadors here, and other soundings, show that the European states, which drafted the Security Council resolution of June 26, which condemned Israel for raiding Lebanon were not keen on holding "another session of the Council, the purpose of which would be to condemn Israel again for refusing to return the captured Syrian officers. Syria, moreover, is urging a resolution "with teeth" — perhaps in the form of sanctions — and the Europeans are even less keen over this prospect.

Israel's declared stand, that the Syrian officers will only be returned as part of an overall prisoner exchange with Syria and Egypt, seems to have met with understanding among these Security Council members. Observers in Jerusalem believe too that the Syrian-Lebanese desire to reconvene the Council has not gained the promise of French support — which was instrumental in securing the June 26 resolution.

Tomorrow Mr. Eban will meet with American Ambassador Walworth Bachour in the last of a series of talks he has been holding with the envoys of Council members.

Beirut, terrorists differ over meaning of accord

By ANAN SAFADI
Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter

Last month's agreement between the terrorists and the Lebanese government was being subjected to flatly contradictory interpretations yesterday. Cairo's semi-official "Al-Ahram" newspaper accused the Lebanese government of trying to eliminate the terrorist movement by one-sidedly interpreting the accord, reached in the wake of Israeli reprisal raids in southern Lebanon.

"Al-Ahram" further charged that the alleged Lebanese campaign was similar to Jordan's elimination of the terrorists in September, 1970. Lebanon "does not have to smear its hands with the blood of the commandos, but it is another September all right," the Egyptian paper said. It noted that the Lebanese government was "benefiting from and exploiting the Israeli attacks" on southern Lebanon.

The differing interpretations placed on the June 30 agreement were highlighted in separate statements by Lebanese and terrorist spokesmen yesterday. Beirut's "As-Sayad" newspaper quoted the chairman of Lebanon's Parliamentary Defence Council, Fuad Lahoud, as saying that the agreement called for the withdrawal of the terrorists from Hasbaya and Marjoun — scenes of last month's retaliatory attacks by Israel — in addition to a terrorist pullout from all villages on the border with Israel.

Lahoud said that the agreement further called for a suspension of terrorist activity from Lebanon, adding that this measure was particularly aimed at the radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and its offshoots, who had voiced opposition to the agreement.

In contrast, "Al-Ahram" quoted the Syrian-backed A-Sa'ika leader, Zuhair Mohsin, as stressing that the agreement called neither for a terrorist withdrawal nor for a suspension of terrorist activity. "But there is a change in tactics," Mohsin said, adding that "the agreement calls for a temporary halt in surface operations in the border area, and not suspension" of terrorist activity.

No progress seen in Coalition talks

By ASHER WALLFISH
Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

The Coalition crisis seemed no closer to solution this morning as Premier Golda Meir prepared for a second round of talks with her Coalition partners. Later today the Labour Party Leadership Bureau is to take up the issue in Tel Aviv.

Mrs. Meir conferred with a group of Labour ministers yesterday morning, to exchange ideas about handling the crisis which grows out of Mapam's support of the I.L.P. civil marriage bill, and the National Religious refusal to vote against the Aguda "Who's a Jew" bill.

Sources in the Prime Minister's Office said the Labour ministers worked on a formula for solving the crisis. But the first round of Mrs. Meir's talks with the Mapam and N.R.P. leaders apparently did not progress far enough for any formula to be presented.

The first round, it appears, was in the nature of a warm-up. Mrs. Meir will hold follow-up meetings with Mapam and the N.R.P. this morning, and she will also have her first meeting with the Independent Liberals.

The meeting yesterday with Mapam leaders Meir Ya'ari and Ya'acov Hazan lasted over two hours, much longer than scheduled (which kept the N.R.P. ministers cooling their heels in the Prime Minister's Bureau, waiting, and left them less time than they had expected.)

Mr. Hazan said later that after Mrs. Meir gave them "a most interesting report" on the Socialist International in Vienna, their talks ranged over the whole spectrum of the crisis. "We came to no decision and our discussion will continue," Mr. Hazan said. He said Mapam would clarify its stand still further, and assure the Premier it wished to make every effort to spare the country a crisis — without violating Mapam's principles.

A Mapam source told The Post that Messrs. Hazan and Ya'ari tried to impress on Mrs. Meir how deeply Mapam's principles were involved in the matter of civil marriage, and how difficult it would be.

Chaban-Delmas resigns Messmer new French P.M.

PARIS (Reuters). — President Georges Pompidou yesterday changed his Prime Minister, installing Gaullist stalwart Pierre Messmer in a move designed to boost the Government's chances in forthcoming legislative elections.

Mr. Messmer, 56, was named Prime Minister four hours after Mr. Jacques Chaban-Delmas, Premier for the past three years, presented his resignation and that of his government at President Pompidou's bidding.

PIERRE MESSMER

'True friend of Israel'

Jerusalem Post Staff

Mr. Messmer served for many years in the fifties and sixties as President de Gaulle's Defence Minister, and in that capacity he was extraordinarily helpful to Israel in selling it armaments, especially warplanes.

An authority on Israel-French relations during those years said Mr. Messmer "spared no effort" to help Israel, and that both he and his wife were genuine friends of Israel.

The possible effect of Mr. Messmer's appointment as Prime Minister on France-Israel relations must remain uncertain — it is known that President Pompidou lays down French foreign policy guidelines himself.

Transport and Communications Minister Shimon Peres last night expressed his personal satisfaction at Mr. Messmer's appointment. He said he had had "the privilege and the pleasure" of working with Mr. Messmer when he had been France's Defence Minister and Mr. Peres the Director-General of the Defence Ministry here.

"I can say with certainty that he is one of those who understands Israel's interests and the Arab-Israeli conflict," Mr. Peres told the France-Israel Friendship League in Haifa last night. "His opinions will not suffer for lack of knowledge of the issue."

REAPPOINTMENTS

Leading ministers of the outgoing Government — such as Finance Minister Valéry Giscard d'Estaing and Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann — are expected to be reappointed when Mr. Messmer names his Government today and tomorrow.

There was, however, speculation that former Prime Minister Edgar Faure, who has a considerable following among Centrist voters though he is a Gaullist, would come into the new administration.

The Gaullists, with their parliamentary allies, hold a big majority in the National Assembly, but they face the prospect of losing dozens of seats in the coming elections.

In his letter replying to Mr. Chaban-Delmas, President Pompidou said: "During our recent conversations, I have indicated to you the reasons which seemed to me to call for the formation of a new Government." He gave no details, but he expressed his appreciation of the "style and talent" which had allowed Mr. Chaban-Delmas to work out an important social programme.

Mr. Messmer, a thick-set, silver-haired man from the Alsace region of eastern France, was a Free French hero in the Second World War. He later served for nine years as General de Gaulle's Defence Minister, in which post he was faced with the tricky task of keeping the French army in line as General de Gaulle granted independence to Algeria.

His life has been marked by several spectacular episodes, such as his hijacking of a ship for the Free French and an adventurous escape after being captured by the Viet Minh in post-war Indochina.

British Leyland to set up Lebanon plant

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter British Leyland, whose withdrawal from Israel last year sent a shock wave through this country's fledgling motor industry, yesterday approached the Beirut government about establishing a car assembly in Lebanon.

Beirut's "Al-Hayat" newspaper said yesterday that plans to set up the assembly in the Lebanon have already been outlined. At the beginning the plant will employ 100 workers to assemble 1,000 cars a year. This would later be increased to 5,000 cars a year, employing 500 Lebanese workers.

South Koreans cautioned not to expect immediate peace

SEOUL — South Korean Premier Kim Jong-Pil warned his countrymen yesterday against expectation of an immediate end to hostilities between South and North Korea. Mr. Kim said peaceful reunification of the divided land is a distant goal. He said he foresees many difficulties in future dialogue with the North Korean Communists. Mr. Kim made the remarks while reporting to the National Assembly on the South-North accord announced in a joint communique on Tuesday. Kim replied to questions from opposition lawmakers. "The unification we want is a peaceful one," Mr. Kim said, "and the best way to attain the goal is to promote understandings through dialogue. As to how long it may take, we will have to be patient until we can trust each other."

Rogers confers with Papadopoulos

ATHENS (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State William Rogers talked yesterday with Premier George Papadopoulos, head of Greece's military regime. It was assumed that Rogers stressed affairs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and did not make an issue of the lack of democracy in Greece, a subject of concern in the U.S. and in other countries allied with Greece in Nato. Assistant Secretary of State Joseph Sisco, U.S. Ambassador Henry Tassa and Greek Deputy Foreign Minister Christian Kaxhopoulos-Palamas attended the one-hour meeting.

Greek opponents of the authoritarian regime have been accusing Washington of keeping the Papadopoulos government in power with military and economic support. More than 20 prominent former members of parliament boycotted Tassa's Fourth of July reception on Tuesday as a protest against Rogers' visiting "those who abolished our own freedom." Later yesterday Mr. Rogers left Greece for Rumania.

Gromyko arrives in Holland

THE HAGUE (Reuter) — The Soviet Foreign Minister, Andrei Gromyko, arrived here yesterday for a three-day official visit amid strict security precautions. It is the first time since Holland recognized the Soviet Union 30 years ago that a Soviet Foreign Minister has visited this country. Stringent security measures were in force when the Tupolev aircraft carrying the Soviet party landed at Schiphol airport near Amsterdam. A helicopter of the Netherlands Royal Air Force circled overhead to keep a watch on the situation. When the Soviet party entered the armour-plated cars in the convoy to take them to The Hague, they were followed throughout the one hour journey by a helicopter.

Before leaving for Luxembourg, Mr. Gromyko will sign an agreement on technical cooperation with his counterpart, Dutch Foreign Minister Norbert Schmelzer. Informal sources said the two men are likely to discuss the planned European security conference, mutual force reductions in Central Europe and possibly the forthcoming 10-nation summit of Common Market countries and would-be entrants.

Mr. Schmelzer has just concluded a four-day visit to Cairo, and visited Israel six weeks ago, raising speculation that the Middle East would also be a discussion point in his talks with Mr. Gromyko.

Sams, Migs proved vulnerable in Vietnam

LONDON (UPI) — Western defence experts said yesterday that considerable numbers of Sam missile sites have been knocked out in recent U.S. bombing of North Vietnam. The information has special significance for the Middle East, they said. New methods are being applied which, defence experts said, make it increasingly possible to "cope" with Sams at tolerable risks. The Russians were said to be aware of the changed situation and to be hurried over the possible implications for the Middle East situation in the event of a major flareup. This was believed among the reasons for recent Soviet advice to the Egyptians and Syrians to think twice before unleashing full-scale war. Israeli air superiority, earlier believed severely handicapped by introduction of massive Sam defences, might prove overwhelming again in the event of a new test of strength. Another factor said to have emerged even more recently is alleged vulnerability of the latest Soviet superonic Mig-23 jet, which so far outstrips American fighters in speed and manoeuvrability. The sources said while fast in flight, the Mig 23 has been observed to be comparatively slow on take-off and above all on landing. On these two occasions the plane is said to be vulnerable. The Soviet Mig-23s operating occasionally from Soviet-controlled Egyptian air fields have been observed to be "chilled" at the time by a large number of the earlier Soviet fighter model, the Mig 21.

Two Protestant brothers executed near Belfast

BELFAST (UPI) — Assassins killed two teenage brothers and dumped their bodies in a ditch near Aldergrove Airport yesterday, raising the toll among civilians to 10 killed since the appearance of Protestant barricades six days ago. A farmer found the bullet-riddled bodies beside a deserted country lane about 11 kms. west of Belfast and called a British Army patrol to investigate. One had been shot in the head in the style of a gangland execution. Police identified the victims as Protestant brothers Malcolm and Peter Orr, 19 and 21, of Alliance Road near the Roman Catholic Ardoyne area, and a scene of frequent sectarian clashes. In other violence, Belfast gunmen in cruising cars wounded an 18-year-old Protestant and a 22-year-old Roman Catholic in separate incidents during the night. The war of the walls meanwhile continued, with both Roman Catholics and Protestants adamant about maintaining their separate "no-go" areas.

Another incident, an army patrol came under fire yesterday from the Catholic Ballymurphy area, a spokesman said. Five were not returned. No casualties were reported.

30 patients die in British hospital fire

SHERBORNE, England (Reuter) — Thirty mentally handicapped patients were killed when fire swept through a newly-renovated wing of a hospital here early yesterday morning. Nursing staff, who raced to the blazing dormitory at about 3.15 a.m. saved seven of the 36 male patients it housed, but one of the seven later died. Most of the victims died in their beds. A spokesman for the Coldharbour Mental Hospital said all 36 were severely mentally handicapped. But the two main doors to the ward were unlocked and it was not understood why none of the patients escaped. "Some of the patients would have been able to walk on their own," the spokesman said. First reports from the scene had put the death toll as high as 38. An ambulance driver among the first to arrive described the situation as "really grim, with smoke everywhere. It is difficult finding the bodies."

Bombs found at L.A. site of Russian troupe

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police say they disarmed a cluster of military explosive devices minutes before they would have exploded in a men's room at the Greek Theatre, where a Russian dance group was performing. The theatre was picketed earlier Tuesday night by Jewish Defence League members, some of whom carried empty rifles and signs warning patrons of the performance that they were attending "at your own risk." A burning cigarette, apparently a crude "timer," was found lying across a fuse that was connected to the devices, said J.N. Lewis, a policeman who was working as a security guard at the open-air theatre. The make-shift bomb could have destroyed the lavatory and would have disrupted the performance by the Ukrainian Dance Company, police said.

Connally ends talks with Gandhi

By TREVOR DREIBERG Jerusalem Post Correspondent NEW DELHI — India's relations with the United States have a long way to go before they can become cordial again. This was the conclusion to be drawn at the end of a press conference given by Mr. John E. Connally, President Nixon's special representative, held here yesterday afternoon. After 45 minutes of sharp exchanges with newsmen, he announced that last Sunday's agreement between India and Pakistan would be taken into consideration when Washington re-examined its policy on India.

Rift remains between India, U.S.

Mr. Connally flew yesterday morning from New Delhi to the Himalayan hill resort of Simla for talks with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. He described his discussion with her as frank, and both sides recognized that they differed greatly on several important international issues. He did not divulge details. One subject which was not raised at the Simla meeting and at meetings with the Indian Foreign and Finance Ministers earlier in New Delhi was the resumption of U.S. economic aid, shut off after the Indo-Pakistan war last December. Mr. Connally said he would have been "delighted" to discuss aid with the Indian leaders if the question had been raised. Mr. Connally told a questioner that the supply of arms to Pakistan figured in the talks with Mrs. Gandhi. He said emphatically that the U.S. had given Pakistan only replacement parts since 1965 — "and that is our policy now." India and Pakistan had made an "excellent beginning" in the recent summit talks, and he hoped this trend would continue. The Nixon administration did not want to "inject" itself into the affairs of the Indian subcontinent. No outside nation should say or do anything to get in the way of direct talks among the nations of the subcontinent to settle their common problems. The U.S. sought no special advantages from these nations in trade or other matters. Mr. Connally said: "We hope the other big powers will do the same." Mrs. Gandhi said she had discussed Vietnam at length, and the area of disagreement between them was very large. The Nixon administration felt its position regarding South Vietnam should be better understood in India. Asked what stood in the way of improved Indian relations with the U.S., Mr. Connally replied that there was more than one obstacle. "Warm and cordial" ties had to be founded on "mutual respect."

Goolagong to face King in tennis finals

LONDON (Reuter) — Evonne Goolagong, the Wimbledon champion, yesterday fought back from the very edge of defeat to beat Chris Evert, the new wonder girl of tennis, in the long-awaited first meeting for a place in tomorrow's final. She lost the first set and trailed love-three in the second before she got into the match. But then the contest built up to a thrilling climax and she went on to win 4-6, 6-3, 6-4 in a match which enthralled the centre court for an hour and 34 minutes. Her opponent for the title will be the 28-year-old Californian, Billie Jean King, three-time former champion who produced one of her characteristic displays of all-court skills to subdue Rosemary Casals of San Francisco 6-2, 6-4 in the other semi-final.

Filipino Moslems kill 53 as Arab mission tours

MANILA — Heavily armed Moslems sacked three coastal villages in troubled Zamboanga del Sur province Tuesday night and early yesterday morning, and hacked to death at least 53 Christians and wounded 100 others, authorities said. National police authorities said most of the casualties were from the Christian village of Kalabasa, about 900 kms. south of Manila. The report on the latest sacking of the villages came while an Egyptian-Libyan mission was visiting Mindanao to determine whether genocide was being committed against the Philippines' 2.5 million Moslems in the area. The mission is now in the neighbouring province of Lanao del Sur, about 100 kms. northeast of Zamboanga del Sur. Authorities said casualties were expected to rise when full reports become available on the latest flareup of violence in Mindanao, where more than 800 lives have been lost in Christian-Moslem feuding the past two years. In a radio message to suburban Camp Crame, authorities said about 100 Moslems, riding on sailboats, attacked Kalabasa village at 6 p.m. Tuesday and burned about 20 houses before fleeing with looted personal belongings and pump boat engines. While the Moslems were murdering the Christians yesterday, the Arab mission was hearing how the Christians murdered the Moslems last year.

In the village of Tacub, 40-year-old Hadji Abdul Alam Gu-rur recounted how he survived a massacre last November in which 62 fellow Moslems were killed and 52 others wounded. He said the incident occurred when government troops fired on a motor convoy of Moslems as they were passing a checkpoint. Fourteen other Moslems were still missing, he added. According to Abdul Alam, some of the Moslems who were unable to jump from the vehicles during the shooting were killed after being made to lie flat on the ground with their hands behind their backs. An army lieutenant and 21 of his men are now facing homicide charges for the massacre. (UPI, Reuter)

Boris Spassky (left) and Bobby Fischer (right) the last time they met over a chessboard at the 1970 Chess Olympics held at Siegen, Germany. They were the captains of the Russian and American teams respectively. Spassky won the encounter. All in all the two grand masters have played five games together, resulting in three wins for Spassky and two draws.

Spassky will accept Fischer's apology

REYKJAVIK (Reuter) — The Russians said last night they would be ready to accept apologies for the way their world chess champion Boris Spassky has been treated by his challenger, Bobby Fischer, and there seemed a real chance that the twice-postponed title match would begin today. The Russian delegation spokesman, Efim Geller, said they had dropped a demand that Fischer should forfeit the first game as a penalty for his absence last week-end when the chess encounter was due to begin. Some officials thought, however, that the start of the match might finally be fixed for Sunday, so as to give Spassky time to recover if the emotions of the past few days.

The apologies were already flowing here yesterday, and the only question was whether their former world champion would be right for Spassky and his aides. The Russians wanted them in writing. The immediate reaction of American chess officials was that the way had now been cleared for the start of the match. They thought Spassky would accept a statement made earlier yesterday by Fischer as an apology even though he avoided accepting blame for the tournament's troubles. Earlier, Dr. Max Euwe, President of the International Chess Federation had said that he could not give behind-the-scenes negotiations, lobbying and numerous news conferences.

NEW JAPANESE PREMIER IS A MAVERICK

TOKYO. — The ruling Liberal-Democratic Party yesterday elected Kakuei Tanaka, 54, its president and new Prime Minister of Japan, in a break with past policies of dependence on the U.S. and aloofness to China.

Mr. Tanaka, a maverick in the establishment, won out over retiring Prime Minister Eisaku Sato's protégé, Foreign Minister Takeo Fukuda, 57. He was chosen after four party ballots were declared invalid.

Mr. Tanaka, the Minister of International Trade and Industry, won after former Foreign Ministers Takeo Miki and Masayoshi Ohira were knocked out of the running on the first ballot and threw their support to him on the second.

The youngest Prime Minister since 1945, Mr. Tanaka, whose three-year term will be confirmed by the Diet today broke the long grip of the establishment bureaucrats on Japan.

After being chosen Prime Minister, he said the time was ripe for Japan to normalize relations with China and to conclude a peace treaty with the Soviet Union. This embittered self-made millionaire was speaking at a televised press conference, barred to foreign newsmen.

The new Prime Minister, known as the "computerised bulldozer" for his quick decisions, also renewed his pledge to strengthen friendly relations with the U.S. He said, "The friendly U.S.-Japan relations have been taken for granted like water or air. We rarely realize we cannot survive without them and a renewed pledge for the friendly relations is necessary."

Although the general electorate had no hand in the voting, popular opinion favoured Mr. Tanaka as the man most likely to carry out an independent foreign policy, ease relations with the U.S. and seek closer ties — possibly ending his diplomatic recognition — with Peking.

Party has been in power for 20 years

By EDUARDO LACHELA

TOKYO (APNS). — THE new Prime Minister of Japan was chosen yesterday without the partisan demonstrations, flamboyant speeches and whooping up that usually go with similar occasions elsewhere in the world. It was a comparatively orderly and decorous ritual as party conventions go. "Issues" did not count much yesterday at the party platform was already spelled out in January, and in a typical stroke the party copied a major plank of the opposition. Socialists by proclaiming a welfare-oriented programme.

Political wags often refer to the Liberal Democratic Party as neither liberal nor democratic, nor even much of a party. Stripped to the bone, it is a coalition of personality factions, constantly struggling with each other for supremacy and patronage. The strongest bond holding the factions to a single party allegiance is the need to preserve the LDP's enduring rule.

It has a conservative, conservative, conservative to the core, sharing its hegemony with big business. Its world-view is still largely influenced by the cold-war alliances of two decades ago, and the party is slow, if not outrightly reluctant, to change to what the "Asahi Shimbun" calls hopefully the "new politics."

It claims to have a membership of 892,896 (as of May 30), but its hardcore cannot number more than 100,000. By few standards can it be considered a mass-based party.

Large numbers of Tories are returned every election, largely because of their personal strength and following. The LDP label becomes less meaningful the further down one goes in the electoral system.

It can hardly be called a democratic exercise for 478 electors to decide among themselves a prime minister to rule over 104,000,000 Japanese citizens.

The LDP is merely exercising its prerogative spelled out in Japan's postwar constitution, which ironically enough was drafted by General MacArthur's occupation government with the intention of imposing Western-style democracy on defeated imperial Japan. Whoever heads the majority party is prime minister, unless the party changes its rules to separate the two offices.

Quite a sensation

Mr. Tanaka's victory is quite a sensation as it ends over 13 years of continuous rule. He is the first non-official to get the job — not a former government graduate with a party mandate, the maddeningly but a poor man's son who hustled his way to the top.

Some LDP men, disenchanted with the entire process, are calling for party reform. Yoshi Kono, a party "dove," is in favour of disbanding the party altogether and starting from scratch again. But it would take no less than a constitutional amendment to bring the electoral system closer to the people and this possibility is as remote as the revival of militarism. What is happening now is not democracy in the classical format but the amazing thing is that it somehow works.

In memoriam ELIEZER KAPLAN

TWO decades have passed since the untimely death of Eliezer Kaplan, the first Minister of Finance and Deputy Prime Minister of Israel. Much of his work and many of his achievements preceded the establishment of the State of Israel. He was one of those who laid the foundations for the edifice and did so much to bring it nearer to completion.

Kaplan distinguished himself by that rare combination of idealism and realism which guided him in his whole magnificent career and service to his people and later to the State.

He knew that a sound financial basis was indispensable for the progress of Jewish settlement, and thus obtained by great effort, ingenuity and personal influence the first bank loan for the Jewish Agency from Lloyds Bank — an unprecedented and quite extraordinary feat as there was hardly any purely commercial collateral for this loan. He had to juggle and perform financial miracles to keep the budget of the Jewish Agency in balance.

During World War Two he participated actively in the operation to rescue the thousands of refugees who came to this country. This aspect of his work assumed tremendous dimensions in the first years after the establishment of the State of Israel, when the population doubled within three years. In this period he was entirely immersed in the effort to house, feed and employ the hundreds of thousands of destitute refugees arriving in Israel. However, even at that difficult and grave time he never forgot the ultimate objective of economic independence, and directed the activities of absorption and integration of the new immigrants with this objective in view.

By turning his attention to the rapid industrialization of Israel, he added a new dimension to his economic work. Under his leadership the foundations were laid for what was later termed the "Israeli economic miracle."

His tragedy was that he did not live to see the fruit of his great endeavours and great achievements.

His was a life of a total dedication to his ideals, of a deep sense of historic responsibility. His quality of leadership was matched by his loyalty to friends and collaborators.

Under the guise of a stern, severe man of finance his was a sensitive and warm personality with total dedication to human values. He knew how to value true friendship and loved people with whom he found a common language no less than the great anonymous mass for whom he toiled.

This highly developed social conscience, his moral standards and human values found a resonance and echo in the hearts of all those who worked with him.

Today after 20 years we know that he was one of the real pioneers of our national renaissance and an unforgettable leader of his people. DAVID HOEHWITZ

WORLD WAR II DOCUMENTS Soviets massacred Polish soldiers at Katyn Woods

LONDON (AP). — The Soviet Union was almost certainly responsible for the execution of more than 10,000 Polish soldiers in the World War II massacre of Katyn Woods, according to British Government secret papers.

The documents, released from 30 years' confinement by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, said a "considerable body of circumstantial evidence" backed up Nazi claims that Germany had nothing to do with the killings.

And they disclosed that Britain kept its suspicions of Russian guilt suppressed for the sake of allied unity during the war.

"We have, in fact, perforce used the good name of England... to cover up a massacre," former British ambassador to Poland wrote in a confidential dispatch seen only by the British Cabinet and King George VI. Britain's dominions and allies were not officially informed of the evidence.

"Up and down the bodies the executioner stamped, hauling the dead bodies about. When it was all over the butchers seem to have turned their hands to one of the most insidious occupations: smoothing the cloth and planting little confetti all over what had been a shambles."

Mr. O'Malley said: "We have been obliged... to restrain the Poles from putting their case clearly before the public, to discourage any attempt by the public and the press to probe the ugly story to the bottom."

Covering up "We have, in fact, perforce used the good name of England, like the murderers used the little confetti, to cover up a massacre, and in view of the immense importance of an appearance of Allied unity and of the heroic resistance of Russia to Germany, few will think that any other course would have been wise or right."

But he questioned "... may it not be that we now stand in danger of bemusing not only others but ourselves?"

The Foreign Office was, according to the documents, disconcerted by the O'Malley dispatch. An official recorded that "unfortunately the Polish case has rather tended to go by default owing to the circumstances..."

Sir Alexander Cadogan, head of the Foreign Office then, confessed, "This is very disturbing. I record that in cowardly fashion I had rather turned my head from the scene at Katyn — for fear of what I should find."

He added: "On the evidence that we have, it is difficult to escape from the presumption of Russian guilt."

Australians united against French nuclear tests 'BANDIT WITH A SHOTGUN'

By WILLIAM HARCOURT SYDNEY (CNS). — THE French nuclear tests in the Pacific have created an unprecedented state of tension between France and Australia. The protest movement against the tests includes almost every segment of Australian society, rich and poor, Left and Right, professional and working class, conformist and non-conformist, Catholic and Protestant.

The Governor of South Australia, Sir Mark Oliphant, a famous nuclear scientist, described France as "a bandit with a sawn-off shotgun, holding the rest of the world to ransom."

Businesses are joining in the boycott against French goods. Dockers have placed a ban not only on French ships but on all French goods carried by any ship. In the French Pacific territory of New Caledonia shipowners have sacked 150 seamen thrown out of work by the Australian ban. The shipowners are going to complain to the French Government.

Disc jockeys Australian Government scientists employed by the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research have condemned the tests. Even disc jockeys on commercial radio stations have banned French songs or made unpleasant comments every time they play a French tune.

The Prime Minister, Mr. William McMahon, repeats vainly that his Government has done all it can. "Not so," says the Labour leader of the Opposition, Mr. Gough Whitlam, smiling victory in an election year. "Call the Pacific nations' ambassadors in Canberra together and suggest all Pacific nations sever diplomatic relations with France."

"Why should the French be allowed to set the bomb off in 'our' ocean? It was not allowed in the Sahara. Why should it be allowed here?" Australians are asking. Australians to a man are incensed with the French Government's "calculated risk," one disc jockey said.

Meanwhile, Australian Government scientists have started to take test samples of food and milk for any increase in radioactive content.

In the returned servicemen's pubs, amid the jangle of one-armed bandits and shouts for more beer, the old "diggers" are recalling long-forgotten resentments. "In the 1914-18 war the French even made us pay rent for the trenches we fought in."

French diplomats are receiving telephone death threats to themselves and their families.

Protest yachts Dr. Jim Cairns, the Labour Shadow Minister for Trade and Industry, a tough uncompromising expellee, has gone to Paris to seek an audience with President Pompidou.

Last Saturday evening the New Zealand yacht Boy Royale sailed for the nuclear zone. The yacht has a crew of six including two Marine Department inspectors who have taken leave of absence to go on the trip. It will take the boat about 10 days to reach the danger zone. Another protest yacht, Greenpeace III, is reported to have been in the danger zone about 50 miles from Mururoa Atoll when the first explosion took place.

A parachute instructor, Gordon Mutch, and two companions are in Fiji and planning to hire an amphibious plane and parachute into the bomb zone. Before he left Sydney airport, Mr. Mutch and his two companions, dressed in parachutists' uniforms, harangued their hippy supporters. "We've got to get there in time," shouted Mr. Mutch. "Peace and f... the French."

Most Australians agree.

THE NEW AMERICAN REVOLUTION — III Ecology — not only 'no'

WHAT happened to the ecology revolution? It started later than the case in the ghetto and on the campuses, drew on a broader spectrum of support and is still going strong. Instead of using violence, its aim was the opposite — to undo the violence that man had done to their environment. Alone among the passionate movements of our time, it has aimed at balance not polarization, at healing alienations (especially of man from nature), not sharpening them.

Logically, there should have been a strong link between the protest about the city and the protest about the environment, for the shame of the cities was as much ecological blight as social blight. But this didn't work out. The leaders of the ethnic inner-city revolts showed far less interest in the problems of pollution, population and technology than they did in income, social justice and political power.

Yet the environmental problems abide. What makes the cities unlivable and ungovernable, makes them so for all. Similarly, the cities will not be saved except by those who have some sense of place and have put down roots into their block and neighbourhood.

Pollution The pollution problem — air, streams, lakes, noise, dead birds, vanishing species — couldn't by itself have fed the fires of the ecology movement. Other sources of incitement have added to it and kept it alive and strong.

One was the population movement, reaching an intense form in Zero Population Growth. It provided a new cause to fight for — to help people make a life by refusing to congest the living space that nature had provided. The second

Worldwide The Stockholm conference on the environment showed that the problems are worldwide, and it gave currency to the term "doom watching," especially in Europe. And the recent unofficial report on the "limits of growth," played this end-of-the-world theme hard, calling on the world's leaders to stop growth in every segment of the eco-system, and work toward what John Stuart Mill called "the stationary state."

Rarely has a revolution gone so fast, broadening and clarifying as it moved, without the sudden deflation and collapse of some of the more violent revolutions of the past and thus achieve balance within man's natural and social environment.

It is right to limit runaway technology and economic growth. But if there is no growth, every social problem becomes stickier, every group claim and demand harder to fulfil, every conflict harder to resolve. The problem is not to stop growth, but control it, and thus achieve balance within man's natural and social environment.

Those who thought it might be an important issue in the 1972 elections have turned out wrong. Pollution has become a no-no for everyone. To a lesser extent, so has population growth, although the recent figures on the decline of the birthrate have taken some of the steam out of the issue. Technology and economic growth also show signs of becoming no-no's.

But the ecology revolution can't subsist only on saying "No." It must say "Yes" to some things. It should say "Yes" not only to the conserving of natural resources, but to the kind of technology which can put new energy resources to use, can cope with pollution and can relieve human drudgery. It should say "Yes" to the mood of the college young who want to settle on the land and who have discovered a new naturalism in their life values.

Technology But it should equally say "Yes" to other young people, from blue-collar and white-collar families, who don't want to break with technology, and who want to use the skills of hand and eye in vocational crafts. It should say "Yes" to all forms of social creativeness and moral imagination, which shape an environment within and beyond the natural environment.

It is right to limit runaway technology and economic growth. But if there is no growth, every social problem becomes stickier, every group claim and demand harder to fulfil, every conflict harder to resolve. The problem is not to stop growth, but control it, and thus achieve balance within man's natural and social environment.

MODERN PASSION PLAY

Building without a licence

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - The already notorious multi-storey housing units being built without licences in Kiryat Hayovel at the junction of Warburg and Rabinowitz Streets are causing a nuisance to the residents of the neighbourhood.

It was reported that, early in the morning at the beginning of May, a large and heavy builder's plank dislodged itself from the crane that was transporting it and dropped from a considerable height right into a sand pit of a kindergarten situated a few metres from the edge of one of the blocks.

It was extraordinarily fortunate that none of the children were in the vicinity and this accident caused no injuries. In view of the recent incident in which two small children lost their lives on a Kiron building project site due to a sandheap left there, we also protest that no safety precautions are being taken on this building.

It is well known that Shikun Ovdim has received the necessary building licence to complete three storeys of the building. The contractor is now blithely completing the fourth floor and starting on the fifth.

Various court orders have been issued against the builders and these have apparently been ignored and the contractor, so far, does not seem to have been warned.

YACOV KOUSSEWITZKY Jerusalem, May 17.

Jerusalem Municipality replies: Shikun Ovdim some time ago received a temporary licence to build the first three storeys at the above-mentioned site, pending completion of the legal formalities necessary for a licence for an eight-storey building. Notwithstanding repeated orders from the Municipality, the company went on building the fourth storey without a permit.

The Jerusalem Municipality obtained a court order to stop work on the extra storey. Shikun Ovdim paid no attention to the court order. The Municipality sent building supervisors and policemen with the order on several occasions but the company continued the work.

The Municipality went to court again, accusing the company of violating a court order, and only then did Shikun Ovdim condescend to stop work for a few days - until it could get its plans authorized by the district planning committee.

Even the Mayor's appeals to Mr. A. Ofer, M.K. and general manager of Shikun Ovdim, were of no avail. With regard to the safety problem raised by your correspondent, as soon as we received the complaint from the parents of the kindergarten children, municipal inspectors, police and safety engineers of the Ministry of Labour went to the site to investigate. The Ministry of Labour representatives asked the company for additional safety measures which were implemented.

We regret that Shikun Ovdim, which should serve as a public example, acted in violation of all court orders, and there is no doubt that this has not added to its prestige.

YITZHAK GROSSMAN, Spokesman Jerusalem, June 21.

'Superstar' and the Jews

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - We learn from an article in your Magazine of June 18 that the rock musical 'Jesus Christ, Superstar' will be filmed in Israel. Israeli facilities are being placed at the disposal of Universal Pictures and young Israelis and Americans are competing for the privilege of playing in this film, with the camera scheduled to roll this coming August.

I have been asking around and find that most Israelis are completely uninformed about 'Superstar.' They don't know that it is a modern musical version of the Passion Play which harms Jews by portraying them as 'Christ killers.' By helping produce this film, Israelis are about to commit a crime against world Jewry and themselves without knowing what they are doing.

This play is the centre of a controversy in the States. The alignment is the usual one: the rabbinate, the solid Jewish community and the Zionists, versus the mass of left-liberal youth, the radical-chic Jewish youth, and the black militants. Many rabbis have urged their congregations to boycott the play. The 'liberal' and radical supporters plead free speech and entertainment value.

By cooperating in the production of the film, Israelis are joining the side of their enemies and are rebuking their friends and allies. Worse than this, Israelis are signing a blank cheque for the producers of this film. Who knows what the finished product will be like, how subtly accusative it may be? Yet who will be able convincingly to criticize the film as anti-Semitic when Israelis and Zionists cooperated in its production?

Before the filming starts in August, should not a committee of respected Israelis study the complexities involved in producing 'Superstar' in Israel? Deliberation now may prevent irreparable harm later.

ISADOR RUBIN Netanya (Brooklyza), June 29.

Ruining Netanya's beauty

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - We are new immigrants and have recently moved into our apartment in Netanya. Friends who live in areas remote from Netanya told us what a beautiful city it is, and their praises helped us to decide to settle here. I must say we are happy in our decision.

We love our sea-front, our sea-front park and our sandy beach. And of course, the swimming pool, which is a major source of pleasure.

We love our street. It is kept very clean and well maintained, and its row of palm trees adds to its beauty.

I wish I could close this letter right here; but I can't. Something is taking place in Netanya that shocks me and my friends. The city administration is approving plans to allow the construction of high-rise hotels next to the sea-front park and the elimination of the swimming pool! And protests to the city and to our regional planning board have fallen on deaf ears. This threat to our sea-front park is unconscionable.

How different this situation is from that of my former home town, Chicago, Illinois, which has won national acclaim for its beautiful Grant Park, a mile-long sylvan retreat on the lake-front. On one side of Michigan Boulevard stands this lovely park. On the other side stand the blocks of skyscrapers of the central business district. The land of Grant Park is perhaps worth billions of dollars, and would bring millions of dollars of real estate taxes into the empty coffers of the city treasury, if the land were opened to developers of high-rise hotels and buildings. But the city fathers, hard pressed though they always have been for cash to run the city, have wisely passed legislation forbidding the construction of any private buildings upon this land! And generations yet unborn will bless them for their foresightedness!

CHARLES MISHKIN Netanya, June 8.

The Netanya Municipality replies: The sea-front of Netanya is probably the only one in Israel which is protected and developed for the use and enjoyment of the general public. To achieve this aim, the Municipality has had to make tremendous efforts to acquire land which has always been in private hands and which had been earmarked for building when the city was still in its infancy.

The case of Netanya is not similar to that of Chicago, where the lake-front belongs to the city and is not private property. You cannot therefore compare Chicago, which forbids development of land in its possession, to Netanya which has to expropriate private land for its plans. Nonetheless, that is what we are doing, motivated by the same high purposes as Mr. Mishkin.

In the specific case under discussion, the land is private and partly earmarked for a hotel. In compensation for the acquisition of some nearby private land necessary to extend the boardwalk and provide parking space and free access to the beach, it was suggested to increase the hotel lot by adding other private land to it; thus the Municipality is acquiring valuable property for the use, benefit and enjoyment of the general public.

Like Mr. Mishkin, we are all anxious to protect the public's interests and welfare, and this is the sole aim of the city's plan.

O. BEN-AMI, Mayor Netanya, June 26.

IMMIGRANTS AND MAIL DELIVERY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - Many a new immigrant will have welcomed a small item in your issue of May 15 to the effect that an advisory committee is being set up to investigate the postal service. It is good to know that the Ministry is aware of the fact that postal deliveries, especially in Jerusalem, are about the worst in the world, making the term 'communications' a misnomer. So I shall not belabour the fact that a letter in Jerusalem may take up to a week to be delivered. I cannot however pass over the scandalous procedure by which important airmail post is deliberately held back because it is 'too big to be inserted in the post box.'

This week a prospective immigrant from London staying as my guest purchased an apartment and was anxiously awaiting his wife's power of attorney to enable him to complete the deal. A by now familiar communication arrived from the post office dated May 9. It transpired then that the documents were posted on April 27. The dateline had thus been missed. My guest returned to London in disgust. An immigrant was lost to Israel. I have retained the envelope. It is marked 901-9-5. I put it in my post box without folding, it had a full inch to spare.

BARRY MINDEL Jerusalem, May 16.

The Ministry of Communications informed Mr. Mindel they were anxious to investigate the matter thoroughly and asked him to forward the envelope in question. They subsequently advised Mr. Mindel that the postman had handed the letter to the nearest post office, since it bore the warning 'Do not fold' and could not be put in the letterbox without being folded. - Ed. HEART-WARMING GESTURE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - On June 3, my husband and I went to Acre in order to hear a concert in the Knights Hall which was advertised in the columns of your paper. When we arrived, we were disappointed to hear that the concert had had to be postponed. A man at the door - names and address.

A few days later, we received by mail an invitation for the next concert at Acre accompanied by two complimentary tickets and a very courteous letter from Mr. Rinoth, Director of the Old Acre Development Company, apologizing for the inconvenience caused us.

We attended the concert and enjoyed it, and it warmed the cockles of the hearts of old-timers like us to come across such a gesture of goodwill. It proved to us that not only in times of emergency are Israelis capable of caring and adding light to our daily existence, marred by thoughtlessness and complacency.

THE COST OF BURIAL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - With reference to the two letters of Mr. Raboff and Mrs. Becker concerning the cost of burial in Jerusalem (June 6 and 14), I wonder that the competent authority has made no comment on these letters regarding extortions by burial societies.

I am at a loss to understand that such things can happen in a state with a socialist government and that there is no way out against this form of exploitation.

Neve Sharett's bus problems

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - I am writing to you in the name of hundreds of residents of Neve Sharett to complain about the service which the Dan Cooperative gives us. We are only served by partial service on routes No. 21 and No. 23; we often have to wait almost an hour for a bus to Tel Aviv, and at rush hours, the buses are all overcrowded. All of us want both routes to function all day from early morning to late at night, including Saturday night, and we want the number of buses at rush hours to be doubled.

As far as the bus drivers are concerned, 97 per cent of them are excellent and most helpful, but the other three per cent make our life a misery, especially for the older people who feel humiliated by them. These drivers refuse to pick up or drop older people between stations, only extending this courtesy to their friends and pretty young girls. They refuse to give information when requested with the excuse that they are not allowed to talk while driving, only to engage in lengthy conversations with their friends. If the rules are to be applied, they should be applied equally to all. A bit more courtesy to passengers would make life pleasanter all round.

We wrote to Dan two weeks ago, but have received no reply to date.

NINA RUSSO In the name of many residents of Neve Sharett Tel Aviv, June 6.

The Dan Cooperative replies: We are now completing plans to reorganize all lines serving the area north of the Yarkon. When these plans go into effect, we feel sure all problems will be remedied to the residents' entire satisfaction. In the meantime, we ask for a little more patience.

With regard to the unsatisfactory three per cent of our drivers, we are doing our best to educate them and hope that this complaint will contribute to the success of our efforts.

EGGED'S SAFETY RECORD

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - A most disturbing aspect of the statistics on traffic deaths in this country is the large percentage of fatal accidents in which buses are involved. Particularly shocking was the report that two children fell victim to the juggernauts in Jerusalem's streets in a single day (June 27).

If Egged had used some of the money it has been spending on advertising spurious comparisons between its tariffs and those elsewhere for driver training and enforcement of safety rules, some of the innocent pedestrians now in their graves might still be living today.

To satisfy its yen for comparisons, it might then take a look at the accident records of foreign bus companies in relation to its own. For example, the Swiss postal bus service, whose routes criss-cross some of the world's most awesome mountains, not long ago completed 50 years of operations without a single fatal accident.

JEW OF MARBLEHEAD

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir - It was with great interest that I read David Landau's article in your issue of June 30. It was indeed informative to learn of U.S. efforts on behalf of Russian Jewry. However, as a transplanted citizen of Marblehead, Mass., I would like to point out that there are far more than 'five or six (Jewish) families' in Marblehead; there are, I would estimate, well over 300 Jewish families who actually live in Marblehead itself, and there are many more who live in the area who are members of Marblehead-Swampscott's (next town over) four synagogues.

Jews are a minority in Marblehead, but that few we are not!

MARTHA B. KATZ Rehovot, June 30.

David Landau comments: Since I have never been to Marblehead, I had to rely on information given to me by the National Congress on Soviet Jewry. I am very sorry that this was inaccurate.

Model of the hotel.

New row over Capital's skyline

By ABRAHAM RABINOVICH
Jerusalem Post Reporter

WITH the dispute over the proposed Hyatt House Hotel still echoing, a controversy has begun to develop in Jerusalem over another high-rise hotel, this one already under construction — the Plaza.

The hotel opposite Hechal Shlomo, is being built on the ridge overlooking the Old City from the west. It is to be 17 stories high. Local planners and some politicians have raised the same objection to it that was raised regarding Hyatt House — namely, that it would be an intrusive element in the visual space of the Old City. In addition, they see it as overwhelming and also encroaching on Independence Park, as well as being far out of scale to the buildings surrounding it.

The site in King George had been chosen a decade ago as the location for a proposed new Municipality building. At that time, the view from the Jordanian-held East, Jerusalem was not a factor in planning discussions and the architect, A. Mansfeld, deliberately decided on a tower more than 20 stories-high — in order to make the Municipality the most prominent building in West Jerusalem. When Teddy Kollek was elected mayor in 1965, however, he killed the plan — preferring to keep the Municipality on the then border of the divided city for symbolic reasons. (Plans are now being drawn up by Mansfeld for a new Municipality building in the Russian Compound.)

Prime value

Following the Six Day War, the King George site, with its superb view towards the Mount of Olives and the Judean Desert, became a prime real estate value. It was acquired by investors who announced plans for a high-rise hotel. When eyebrows were raised, reference was made to the previous plans for a high-rise on the same site, the differences between a civic symbol and a profit-making hotel being overlooked along with the revised aesthetic considerations suggested by the physical reunification of the city.

During the public deposition of the building plan, the only formal objection apparently was by the former owners of the land who protested that their property had been expropriated for the Municipality building and not for a hotel.

Significant change

Informal objections by the Council for the Beautification of Israel, however, did effect one significant change. The building as proposed by the investors was a 14-story structure perpendicular to the street. The council suggested trimming its length by about 9 metres, leaving more space for a public plaza. The investors would be permitted to compensate for the space thus lost by adding three more stories. The District Planning Commission and the investors accepted the suggestion. The backers of the hotel point to the council's key role in raising the height of the building. Council members say that they were trying to make the best of a bad situation and that the building should not have been there at all.

While the hotel architect, Mordechai Ben-Horin, went back to his drawing board to produce a design for a 17-story building, a building licence was granted the investors for the construction of three stories for parking below street level (not reckoned in the overall height of the building) which are now nearing completion.

Last week the investors returned to the Local Planning Commission to obtain a permit for the main part of the structure. They ran into an unexpected roadblock when Commission member Gershon Salomon, of Gahal, asked for a two-week delay before a decision. He declared afterwards that he intended to use the time to organize public opposition to the additional three stories.

"They want to build this high-rise at a very sensitive place," he declared. "It blocks the view towards the Old City from King George and it will dominate the view towards the west from the Temple Mount and the Mount of Olives."

Although the building had already been approved by the District Planning Commission, Mr. Salomon said that public pressure, which had proved effective in the Hyatt House dispute, could also prove effective here in trimming the height of the building.

Different climate

The climate regarding planning has changed considerably in Jerusalem since the Plaza originally came up for approval. At that time, building proposals like those for the Plaza and the Wolfson buildings were coming in at a relatively rapid rate and the inclination was to encourage such project. The increasing concern over the character of the city's development, however, has put a new perspective on these projects. One of the principal figures involved in the approval of the Plaza was reported to have said recently: "How did we ever let this get by?"

Members of the Urban Planning Unit have also become involved in a search for some method to cut the building back to 14 stories — or even further still. Municipality lawyers have been asked to see if the plans were required to be deposited again when the District Planning Commission agreed to increase the height by three floors.

(Deposition is the stage when the public can register its formal protests.) Normally, the Commission can make changes in a building's design if no change in volume is involved.

A more radical approach is taken by Urban Planning Unit architect Art Kutcher who contends that the entire plan, including the bottom 14 stories, be redeposited. "When the plan was originally deposited," he said this week, "people couldn't understand what it was. They didn't see a panorama view and there was no way they could tell what it would look like. The plan has to be deposited in a form that people can understand."

Kutcher himself has now prepared a series of panorama views of the Plaza as seen from Gethsemane, Jaffa Gate, Independence Park and King George Avenue, which he plans to present to the Local Planning Commission when it meets next Monday to discuss the matter.

"In terms of scale," he said, "the building is an act of arrogance. It overwhelms Independence Park, particularly the nicest part of it which is just below the site. The building doesn't relate to the street and doesn't contribute to making street space. It's an anti-social siting. From the medium range, from Jaffa Gate, it's a foreign element on the skyline."

Nine stories higher

"It's nine stories higher than the dome of Hechal Shlomo which is now the dominant building in the area. As for the far range, the building lies on the sacred east-west axis of the Temple and the Dome of the Rock. It makes some sense to put Hechal Shlomo on this axis but it's an ignominious thing to put up a building like this. Most people aren't aware of this now. They go where guides take them. But in 50 years from now most people will understand about these things. They will discover the secrets of this place that only historians understand now. The Mount of Olives will be part of the National Park and people will make their way there and look at the axis. We are destroying this for them."

The architect of the Plaza, Mr. Ben-Horin, dismisses Kutcher's charges. "We're not taking any part of Independence Park. On the contrary, we're providing a plaza that will bring the park to the edge of the sidewalk on King George." Mr. Ben-Horin said that an architect member of the Council for the Beautification of Israel had asserted that the plaza between the street and the park would be a "jewel."

By turning the building sideways, to the street, Mr. Ben-Horin said he was keeping most of the view towards the Old City open to pedestrians. As for the view from the Mount of Olives and the Temple Mount, says Mr. Ben-Horin, "we're a little higher than Hechal Shlomo but much narrower. If you can say that Hechal Shlomo has an influence on the Old City then we do too."

Opponents of the building are likely to encounter stiff resistance in the planning commission. Deputy Mayor Haim Marinov notes that the investors have complied with all the legal steps required of them and have duly been granted approval of their plan by the proper authorities.

Ruling limits school choice for teachers' children

By HIRSE GOODMAN
Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

EDUCATION Minister Yigal Alon confirmed in the Knesset this week that a teacher at a State Religious School who sends his child to an independent school (run by Agudat Yisrael) stands to lose his job.

In reply to a question from Rabbi Shlomo Lorincz (Agudat Yisrael), Mr. Alon said that according to the terms of a ruling by the Council for National Religious Education (run by the National Religious Party), any teacher who teaches at a National Religious School who sends his children to a school run by any other institution, will lose his job, unless the move was made "under special circumstances." Since it is fairly obvious that no religious teacher would send his child to a secular school, the ruling was in fact enforced to ensure that teachers at NRP schools keep their children out of schools run by the religious opposition parties.

The logic behind the ruling, Mr. Alon said, was that the council felt that any teachers in National Religious Schools who sent their children elsewhere were not identifying with the spirit in which they were educating.

Not compulsory

In reply to another question from Mr. Avraham Katz (Gahal), Mr. Alon said that sex education was not a compulsory subject in the country's schools. The reason for this, Mr. Alon said, was that sex could not be taught as other subjects, and that no ideal framework for the teaching of the subject has yet been devised.

Due to the importance of the subject, however, sex discussions are held with the pupils, usually under the guidance of doctors, sociologists and educators, the Minister said, as well as during biology lessons where both the physiological and psychological aspects of the subject are broached. In addition to this, the Ministry of Education has provided pupils with literature on the subject, he concluded.

Police Minister Shlomo Hillel reported that 136 prostitutes were arrested on the Tel Baruch road during the first five months of this year. Answering a question from Mr. Ze'evan Shuvai (State List), the Minister said over the past two years there have been four cases of rape reported on the same road, and 14 persons were arrested since January of this year on suspicion of loitering.

In reply to another question from Mr. Nissim Ehad (Independent Liberals) the Police Minister said that no complaint had been received from Red Cross officials in Israel that they had been threatened with murder in the wake of the Sabena hijacking incident. Not only had no complaint been received, the Minister said, but neither had his Ministry any knowledge of the alleged threats.

Nearly 170 persons were arrested while watching soccer last season, the Minister told Mrs. Shoshana Arbelli.

Doctors in Japan rejoin severed hand

TOKYO (UPI). — Doctors in central Japan have rejoined the severed hand of a lumber yard worker to his arm, a Japanese news agency said Tuesday.

Kyodo news agency said the delicate operation was performed by surgeons in Nara on an unidentified worker who lost his hand on last Tuesday six hours after an accident with a buzz saw. Two arteries, four veins and three nerves also had to be rejoined.

The worker's condition has shown improvement and if it continues doctors said he should recover the normal function of his hand.

Acoustic adventure

The Israel Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra; Mendi Rodan, conductor; Yehli Wagman, piano (Kingsnet Ha'oma, Jerusalem, July 1). Brahms' Symphony No. 4; Ravel: Piano Concerto in G; Gershwin: "An American in Paris."

FOR a symphony orchestra usually confined to the limited space and acoustics of the Y.M.C.A. Auditorium, coming out into the lofty and airy concert hall of the Bin-yen Ha'omah occasionally is an adventure every time. However, it takes time before the musicians adapt themselves to all the space around them and assimilate their dynamics to acoustical conditions prevailing in the big hall.

Consequently, the Brahms Symphony — quite an ambitious undertaking — sounded at first a big brittle in tone and slightly clumsy in the melodic lines and motive of instruments. But already in the course of the first movement, ranks were closed and communication established leading to quite a representative performance of this great work. The Scherzo was too hurried for all phrases to be pronounced distinctly, and the resulting scramble of the orchestra's. But, on the whole, it was a remarkably good and lively performance.

Ravel described his intention in this piano concerto as "light-hearted and brilliant, and not aiming at profundity or at dramatic effects." He thought in fact of calling it a "divertissement." Yehli Wagman's execution of his solo part was brilliant, but the light-heartedness prescribed by the composer was somewhat missing and slightly impaired the enjoyment of the work for cognoscenti. But his overwhelming technique and his sincerity aroused the audience to stormy and prolonged applause.

To lead from the heaviness of the concert season, represented by the Brahms Symphony, to music's lighter side, more appropriate to hot summer nights, Gershwin's "An American in Paris" served its purpose well. The orchestra followed the conductor's efforts with alacrity, and the concert ended in cheerful mood on a highly encouraging grade, demonstrating the impressive plans of proficiency reached through the devoted work of Mendi Rodan.

Poetry sounds better than it is

By CURTIS ARNSON

Special to The Jerusalem Post

ON Monday night, a poetry reading took place at the Jerusalem Khan, featuring four English and two Israeli poets. The evening, one of five such readings scheduled throughout Israel this week, was co-sponsored by the Bimot Theatre and the British Council who co-operated in a similar series of readings 15 months ago.

Two of the English poets, George MacBeth and Adrian Mitchell, are accustomed to frequent readings. They have a delightful stage presence and write poetry in which the sounds are often more important than the occasionally superficial content.

Hugo Williams was shy and nervous. His poetry is less exhibitionist and more personal than the other two, and is not particularly effective when forced into the carnival mould. In a quieter, more intimate atmosphere, we could appreciate the poetry and not just empathize with the uncomfortable poet, Robert Conquest, a Sovietologist and co-editor of several science fiction anthologies, is, however, a fairly mediocre poet — in other words, his work is on a par with most of current poetry.

It is a shame that there are so few poetry readings in Israel. This relative rarity forces on the readings that do take place a grandeur out of proportion to what is delivered. None of these poets would be out of place in a scene where readings are common — not a very occasional occurrence.

High Court and labour courts

The High Court of Justice, by majority decision, made absolute an order nisi calling upon the National Labour Tribunal to show cause why its judgment should not be quashed.

The petitioner had been employed as a cook in the second respondent's East Jerusalem restaurant for nineteen years. When he left his employment in consequence of a dispute with his employer he claimed severance compensation, holiday pay, overtime pay and compensation for delayed salary payments. The Regional Labour Court granted him back holiday pay and delayed wage compensation only. His employer appealed against this decision to the National Labour Court and the petitioner cross-appealed. The National Labour Court partly allowed the employer's appeal, reducing the holiday pay by a half and cancelling the delayed wage compensation. The petitioner's cross-appeal was dismissed outright.

The petitioner thereupon petitioned the High Court of Justice for an order of the nature of certiorari, arguing that the National Labour Court had committed a flagrant error of law. He was granted an order nisi.

Section 29 (b) of the Labour Courts Law, 1969, provides that: "A National Court which hears an appeal shall be competent to grant any relief which the Supreme Court sitting as a Court of Appeal is competent to grant, and within the scope of its jurisdiction its power shall be the same as that of the Supreme Court."

On the return day Mr. Simon appeared for the petitioner and Mr. Wagner for the respondents.

Decision
Justice Berinson, who delivered the first opinion of the High Court, pointed out that before the merits of the petition could be considered the preliminary question of whether the High Court had jurisdiction or not had first to be settled. In view of the respondents' counsel's argument that as the matter at issue had come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the labour courts and had been finally decided by the National Labour Court, section 29 (b) of the Labour Courts Law precluded any recourse to the High Court of Justice.

In discussing this question Justice Berinson first established the status of the labour courts. Under section 7 (b) (3) of the Courts Law, 1957, he said, the High Court of Justice is empowered to order all courts and tribunals with judicial powers, save the courts of law and the religious courts, to deal or refrain from dealing with a particular matter and may quash any decisions given unlawfully by such courts or tribunals. In the case of the religious courts, on the other High court's powers of control over national labour court.

LAW REPORT

Edited by Doris Lankin

THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1972

hand, the High Court may intervene only if they exceed the bounds of their competence by dealing with matters in which they have no jurisdiction or by ignoring the laws of natural justice. The Labour Courts, he continued, in contradistinction to the religious courts (with whom they have in common only the fact that both have exclusive jurisdiction in some matters and concurrent jurisdiction in others) come within the scope of section 7 (b) (3) of the Courts Law, and their decisions may, therefore, be quashed by the High Court if repugnant to the law, unless the Labour Courts Law itself expressly exempts them from the control of the High Court.

Justice Berinson then went on to examine the Labour Courts Law in order to determine whether it does in fact exempt the labour courts from the control of the High Court. Section 29 (b) of that Law, he pointed out, differentiates between judgments of the labour courts in civil matters and in criminal matters. In criminal matters, he continued, a decision of the National Court (to whom an appeal lies from a decision of a Regional Court) is appealable to the Supreme Court of Appeal; and decisions of the National Labour Court in criminal matters are therefore not subject to the control and intervention of the High Court of Justice.

There is no similar provision, he continued, for decisions of the National Labour Courts in civil matters and it may be learnt from this omission, as well as from the fact that section 29 (b) of the Law confers the same power on the National Court as that of the Supreme Court, that no such appeal lies to the Supreme Court in civil matters. In such matters, therefore, it must be concluded that the decisions of the National Labour Courts are subject to the control and intervention of the High Court of Justice.

In reaching this decision Justice Berinson distinguished between judgments of the National Insurance Courts of Appeal and those of the National Labour Courts, pointing out that in the former case the law made such judgments equivalent to judgments of the Supreme Court in all matters, where section 29 (c) of the Labour Courts Law omits the words "in all matters." That this was done deliberately, he held, with the intention of making the National Labour Court subject to the control of the High Court of Justice in civil matters can be gathered from the explanatory remarks addressed to the Knesset by the Minister of Labour when tabling the bill.

It may well be asked, continued Justice Berinson, what the difference is between an appeal to the Supreme Court and subjecting the decisions of the National Labour Court to the control and supervision of the High Court of Justice. The answer to this question, he said, that a right of appeal is dependent upon an express provision of law conferring such right, and when an appeal is brought it must be decided on its merits in accordance with the laws relevant to the issue. On the other hand, the High Court of Justice can hand down an order of the nature of certiorari, on the basis of the general provisions of section 7 of the Courts Law, which also allow the High Court the discretion to refuse to give such an order, even if there is a basis for it in law, if it does not deem it necessary to do so in the cause of justice.

Justice Berinson then went on to note that a five-man bench of the High Court had but lately expressed the opinion that it has the right to exercise control over decisions of the National Labour Court (see H.C. 148/71, 1 P.D. 26/18). However in this previous case the whole question of jurisdiction had not been thoroughly discussed as opposing counsel had not differed in principle on its scope, and the High Court had in fact held that only on the rare occasion would it interfere with decisions of the Labour Courts, not every and any error of law committed by these courts warranting such intervention. He wished to confirm this stand, he continued, and stress that only when the National Labour Court commits a substantive error of law, which justice demands should be corrected, would the High Court intervene.

It is, however, of paramount importance, Justice Berinson went on to hold, both constitutionally and in the interests of the public, that no public body or individual fulfilling a judicial or administrative function under the law should feel at liberty to act at will and without any supreme judicial control, in the absence of any express licence to do so from the Knesset. For it is widely-accepted that in order to limit or deny the jurisdiction of the High Court of Justice it is not sufficient for a statute to state in general terms that a decision of a particular body or individual shall be final, or not subject to further appeal. On the contrary, any restriction of the High Court's duty to act as watchdog over the legality, regularity and reasonableness of the conduct of the public authorities of the State must be expressly and unequivocally provided for by the sovereign legislative body of the State (see also H.C. 176/54, P.D. 9/617). Furthermore, he continued, from a practical viewpoint, too, it is not desirable to make the decisions of any tribunal final and not subject to the control of one supreme judicial body. For this could lead to the creation of different systems of law by different judicial tribunals, particularly when such tribunals consist—as do the Labour Courts—of representatives of the public and not only of professional judges, and when the opinions of these amateurs in the field of law very often outweigh those of the professionals.

Mayor's brother gets city contract

Jerusalem Post Reporter
SAFAID. — Egged claims that the Safad Municipality violated an agreement with the bus cooperative when it hired a trucker, the mayor's brother, to transport 700 children to and from summer camps during the next three weeks. Egged spokesman Mordechai Schiffman told a press conference Tuesday that trucking the children also endangered their safety.

He said Egged had offered to transport the children "at a big reduction" for only IL450. But, the municipality had hired Mr. Shmuel Kadoah, brother of Mayor Eli Kadoah, who was charging IL600, he claimed.

Mayor Kadoah told The Post that the decision to hire his brother had been taken by an all party-committee which had considered the offers made by Egged and the trucker. He had refrained from taking part in their deliberations and had in no way been involved.

Sociologists tell what not to do

By ERNIE MEYER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

THERE have been no dramatic breakthroughs in the science of sociology, comparable to the successes achieved in biology or medicine. The role of sociology has been more in advising what not to do, Professor Talcott Parsons told The Jerusalem Post in an interview this week.

Prof. Parsons, one of the world's leading sociologists was in Israel (on his third visit) to receive an honorary doctorate (his seventh) from the Hebrew University on Monday.

Asked if more practical applications may result from theoretical sociological research, Prof. Parsons said that expectations may be entertained, "but very cautiously so."

Prof. Parsons saw parallels to Israel's problems of immigrant absorption in the problem the U.S. faces with the movement of Negroes from the rural South to the North and with the influx of Puerto Ricans. While there are many voices in the world today advocating "stop all growth" or "no growth" policy, Israel is one country that definitely cannot subscribe to such tendencies, he said.

Prof. Parsons said that he strongly endorsed the justification of there being a State of Israel, but "I would not endorse the view sometimes put forward that all Jews should come here. What I mean is that the idea of the coincidence of ethnicity and cultural tradition with political identity is not desirable. That is a nineteenth century ideal. Its principle could be destructive of U.S. society."

Referring to the internal threat to academic freedom, Prof. Parsons said that U.S. students paradoxically revolted against authoritarianism in the universities, although the modern university is one of the least authoritarian institutions.

Speaking specifically of student disturbances at Harvard in 1969, he pointed out that it was according to a kind of "negative wisdom" based on sociological insight that administrators refrained from calling in police, which would only have fanned the flames of student revolt. The citation for the degree by the University Senate says in part: "Professor of Sociology at Harvard University, former President of the American Sociological Association and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Prof. Parsons is an outstanding figure in the development of sociological theory, philosophy and fighter for academic freedom and the rights of the individual. It is primarily as a result of Prof. Parsons' monumental work 'The Structure of Social Action' that sociology in the 1940s became a unified and accepted scientific discipline in the U.S. His investigations led to the introduction of the systems approach to the study of societies and institutions. For the last thirty years no other sociological theory has had a greater impact on research in this field. Prof. Parsons' unequivocal position as a scholar bent on preserving absolute scientific objectivity while at the same time promoting his firm belief in the values of free democracy, served as an inspiration to many, both in the early 1950s when academic freedom was under attack from the outside and in the difficult period of internal threat to that freedom during the last few years."

Fasting fakir starves snakes charms Melissa

BELO HORIZONTE Brazil (Reuters). — An Argentine "fakir" trying to beat the 124-day world fasting record seated on a bed of 1,008 nails has starved to death four of the cobras accompanying him in the attempt.

Two rattlesnakes, also keeping the fakir company in a glass enclosure at the local showgrounds in this southern city, were hastily transferred to the zoo Monday night for emergency treatment for malnutrition.

Undaunted, the fakir, known as Professor Kaurius, has taken into the glass showcase a 12-metre long, weighing 64 kilos, captured recently in Brazil's Amazon jungle.

A 22-year-old local beauty, identified as Melissa, has been "hypnotized" by the fakir's charms. After visiting him each day on his bed of nails, Melissa climbed down into the enclosure to join him and the box. Some 5,000 people have filed past the showcase over the last 18 days to gawk at the mousetailed Argentine sitting on the nail block.

Professor Kaurius will need to remain in his glass urn until October 10 to beat the fasting record held by an unidentified Chinese.

Liberal Party holds the key

Labour mobilizing support for electoral reform bill

By ASHER WALLFISH Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter As the Labour Alignment began mobilizing support for its private members' bill next Wednesday on electoral reform, the Liberal wing of Gahal... which holds the key to the bill's success... prepared for a crucial meeting of its Executive tomorrow (Friday) to decide on its voting policy.

set, would introduce regional-proportional elections in a mixed system, with the majority of Knesset seats distributed on a regional basis and the rest on a countrywide proportional list basis, as now. In theory, all of Labour's 49 votes are committed to the bill by several decisions of the party's bodies. But two Labour MKs are undergoing medical treatment, and three are abroad. (The faction bureau in the Knesset yesterday sent an urgent cable to Hatzadim Secretary-General Yitzhak Ben-Aharon in Europe, asking him to return to Israel in time for the Wednesday vote.)

able support of two Free Centre and three State List MKs, plus independent Meir Avishar, who is presenting a related bill on the same day. Labour also hopes to convince its four Alignment-affiliated Arab and Druse MKs to join it. The Liberals hold the key to the vote with their 11 seats. The Liberal Party is committed to electoral reform in principle, but a stiff fight is expected in the Liberal Executive on Friday over the action to be taken on the private member's bill. Six of the 11 Liberal MKs favour Labour's electoral reform bill, and want to enforce a decision of the Liberal Executive obliging the rest to support Labour. Of the remaining five, three declare openly that they are against; one is undecided; and one is abroad.

Knesset to crack down on illegal arms possession

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter Police Minister Shimon Hillel yesterday presented an amendment to the Criminal Code Ordinance, doubling the existing penalties for illegal possession of firearms. The amendment, he said, comes in the wake of the "astronomical" rise in the number of armed robberies of late. He added that he hoped the amendment would be passed on the second and third readings before the Knesset goes into recess at the end of this month. Mr. Hillel noted that the incidence of armed robbery had more than doubled since 1969. The reason for this, he felt, was the huge arsenal of illegal weapons which had found their way into usually law-abiding homes since the Six Day War. The police, he said, were not in the possession of statistics, nor were they aware exactly how many guns were in circulation. Most of the weapons, he said, were being kept by soldiers and reservists as souvenirs, but these were sending their way into irresponsible hands.

The amendment, decided upon by the Cabinet only this Sunday, will provide for a two-week freeze, during which all persons in possession of unlicensed weapons will be able to hand them over to the authorities without fear of punishment. Police will accept weapons anonymously and will not demand any explanation of how the weapons were obtained. If, however, a person is found to be in possession of a weapon after this time, he will be held responsible before the law and can expect the full punishment. The amendment also stipulates that any person who uses a licensed weapon must inform the police of this within 24 hours. If not, he too will be liable to punishment. Mr. Hillel noted that the amendment was an emergency measure, and that fuller and more detailed legislation on the subject was being prepared by the Ministry of Justice and would be presented to the House soon.

I.R.A. 'invited' to open propaganda office here

Jerusalem Post Reporter BEERSHEVA — The Irish Republican Army has invited to open an information office in Israel — by the Beersheba branch of the Herut Young Guard. The young Herut activists said they were "outraged" by the news that the British Government was permitting the Palestine Liberation Organization of Yasser Arafat to open an office in London. They were particularly incensed by reports that the British had justified this move by drawing a comparison between Arafat and Herut Party leader Menachem Begin (who visited England a few months ago).

holds true," a Herut branch member said yesterday. "The British share the guilt of the Germans since they prevented survivors of the Holocaust from coming to Eretz Yisrael," he said. The initiator of the invitation, Mr. Nissim Taitov, 36, local representative in the Party's Central Committee, said he was prepared to go to Britain or Ireland to contact the I.R.A. Asked if the local branch had consulted with the authorities or with their party's national leadership on the invitation, a local Herut member told The Jerusalem Post: "They'll read about it in the papers." Mr. Taitov is Beersheba correspondent of the afternoon daily "Yedioth Aharonot."

Court orders sex shop arson suspects held

The Supreme Court yesterday overruled the decision of the Tel Aviv District Court to release on bail two yeshiva students suspected of perpetrating the fire-bombing of Tel Aviv's Eros sex shop on June 21. In allowing the State's appeal against the release of the two suspects — Yisrael Brant and Shmuel Weissenstein — the Supreme Court ordered them remanded until their trial. "Terror leads to counter-terror," Justice Landau said in handing down his decision, "and is liable to plunge the country into chaos. This consideration takes precedence over the evil of denying a man his freedom before he is convicted." The District Court had failed to take sufficiently into account both the gravity of the charges against the two suspects and the conditions prevailing in this country today, Justice Landau said. Weissenstein, 19, and Brant, 18, both Jerusalem yeshiva students, are suspected of breaking into the Eros shop with criminal intent, attempting to inflict "grievous bodily injury" on a police officer, and forcibly attempting to resist arrest. The District Court had ordered their release on IL30,000 bail each. (Tim)

Tourism for June shows disturbing lag

By AARON SITTNER Jerusalem Post Reporter Tourism figures for June — the first month following the Lod massacre — show a disturbing lag in the expected upturn. But hoteliers are not worried. According to figures just released by the Central Bureau of Statistics and the Ministry of Tourism, June tourist arrivals totalled 64,900, compared with 67,900 in May. Such a dip is not unusual, however. As several hotel managers explained to The Post, June is always a slow month, coming between the April-May high season (which includes Pessah, Independence Day and Easter) and the busy July-August summer season. What bothers the tourism circles, however, is the fact that last month's figure is hardly higher than that of June, 1971 — although there were sharp rises in the first five months of the year, relative to 1971. Whereas tourism this year has been running 30 per cent ahead of the monthly figures for last year, traffic in June rose by only 12 per cent.

Less red tape for reservists going abroad

From now on army reservists planning to travel abroad will no longer be required to make two trips to their reserve units in order to obtain the required permission to travel. This was announced on Tuesday by the Army weekly, "Bamahane," which said the General Staff had issued new directives aimed at streamlining the procedure. From now on it can all be done by mail, "Bamahane" explained. At least 21 days before his intended departure, the reservist should send a written request to the commander of his unit, or to his liaison reserve office, indicating his name, address, army rank and serial number, his planned departure date, the length of his stay abroad and the countries he plans to visit. Another change in procedure is that from now on the reservist will not have to deposit his army book with his unit before he leaves, but simply leave it at home. "Until now, getting the required permit — which, except in rare instances, is granted automatically — involved making two trips: the first to fill out the application, and the second to pick up the permit."

Immigrants' flats must have mezuzot

A mezuzah will henceforth be affixed by the Absorption Ministry at the entrance to every immigrant's flat, according to an agreement reached this week between Religious Affairs Minister Zerah Warhaftig and Absorption Minister Natan Peled. The Government Press Office, which reported the arrangement, added that the immigrant can have a mezuzah installed on the rest of his doors if he so wishes.

Black Hebrews' sentencing postponed

Jerusalem Post Reporter BEERSHEVA — Sentencing of the five Black Hebrews convicted in the killing of Cornell Kirkpatrick was yesterday postponed until next Wednesday after the defendants and their attorney failed to appear in court. Defence attorney Yosef Ben-Monashé of Tel Aviv reportedly said yesterday over the phone that he had not been informed of yesterday's date in court. The District Court on June 21 found James Coates, 41, guilty of manslaughter in the January 20 killing of his fellow sect-member, Kirkpatrick. His four co-defendants — Thomas Winfield, John Boyd, Charles Clark and Thomas Glover — were convicted of conspiring to attack Kirkpatrick and two companions after the three had been "expelled" from Dimona by the sect.

Full-dress Knesset debate on German buses for J'lem

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter The Egged bus cooperative's purchase of 150 German-built Mercedes buses, for use in Jerusalem, will come up in the Knesset in a full-dress plenary debate, the House decided yesterday. Transport Minister Shimon Peres, who agreed to a debate when he replied to two urgent motions for the agenda presented by Gahal and the Free Centre, stressed that just as he had approved Egged's request to buy the Mercedes buses, he would continue to approve similar requests in the future — because it is impossible and illogical to boycott German goods. If Jerusalem received its electric current supply from equipment made in Germany, he asked why should the capital not use German buses? Mr. Eliezer Shostak (Free Centre) said that a storm would ensue if Holocaust survivors in the Holy City were compelled to ride in buses made by a firm which collaborated closely with the Nazis. Mr. Dov Milman (Gahal) said that the Jerusalem City Council would not let the Mercedes buses enter the city. Egged's permit should be revoked, he said, and other bus firms allowed to provide Jerusalem with transportation services. Mr. Milman said that the Transport Ministry had originally objected to the transaction but then changed its mind.

Gov't supports families of jailed terrorists

Jerusalem Post Reporter BEERSHEVA — Israel is making welfare payments to West Bank and Gaza Strip families of jailed terrorists and of men who died in the wars or fled beyond the ceasefire lines, Social Welfare Minister Michael Hazani said yesterday. Mr. Hazani, who added that the payments would total some IL5m this year, made the statement while touring a seaside summer camp for West Bank youngsters at Sidna Ail, near Here. The Ministry-aided camp, which offers the formerly landlocked Arab children 10 days of swimming and lightsight, is supervised by a Jericho man, Mr. Zaki Tarik. It has already accommodated three groups of 120 children each since the season — the fifth the Ministry has run — opened, at the beginning of June.

Gov't booster for small exporters

By AARON SITTNER Jerusalem Post Reporter The Ministry of Commerce and Industry yesterday announced new incentives aimed at drawing more manufacturers into the export field. Meeting with reporters at the Ministry's headquarters in Jerusalem, Mr. Adin Talbar, Deputy Director-General for Foreign Trade, announced that a "cooperative payment" of 10 agora for each dollar's export will henceforth be granted to small exporters — those who ship less than $100,000 worth of goods abroad annually. In addition, the Ministry will participate — on a 50 per cent basis — in export promotion efforts by these firms, up to a limit of IL4,000 on the Ministry's part. However, the companies will have to prove that these promotional activities cost them more than 4 per cent of their annual exports' dollar value. The incentives will assist these exporters in such activities as market research, advertising abroad, preparing catalogues and participating in foreign trade fairs. Exporters of the following commodities will not be eligible for the new payments: diamonds, petroleum, phosphates, clay products, potash, soybean oil, cotton thread, arms and ammunition, scrap metal and cement. "In the past," said Mr. Talbar, "we have found that between 40 and 50 manufacturers graduate into the $100,000-a-year category annually. With this new incentive programme we hope to raise this number to 200." (By the end of 1971 there were 387 companies who exceeded the $100,000 mark. This roster included about 50 export agencies — firms who themselves do not produce anything, but act as marketers for the manufacturers.) According to Mr. Talbar, there are 150 kibbutz-based industries which export less than $5,000 worth of goods a year. "These enterprises would like to get ahead but cannot do so without some extra help," he said.

Share market retains recent advances

Jerusalem Post Financial Reporter TEL AVIV — The stock market was again firm yesterday, and share prices remained on the high levels reached during the three previous days. Turnover was fair, with IL1.2m in the opening and IL1.4m in the variables. The General Index of Share Prices rose by 0.59 per cent to stand at 244.64. The Natad dollar advanced another agora to IL4.32, with a turnover of about $100,000. Indexed bonds edged higher, and foreign currency and dollar-linked bonds were steady. Heavier trading yesterday took place in industrial and real estate shares. Most active was Israel Land and Development Company. The bearer shares advanced one point in the opening to 240, and closed at 241 with 161,000 shares changing hands. Africa IL10 shares were also better at 352, up 1. Property and Building was again in movement after a period of only small changes. The shares gained 1/2 in the opening, 3/4 in the variables, and closed at 221. Rascos preferred climbed two points in the opening, but lost 1/2 in the variables, closing at 100 1/2.

INDUSTRIALS

In the industrials, Electra shares rose three points in the opening to 239, but later climbed to 250. Ata's shares were up 1/2 on the day on 168 1/2. Dubek opened at 361, down 6, but closed at 370 — a net gain of three points. Electric Wire was 2 better at 191, and Cold Storage was 3 higher at 290. Lighterage lost 3/4 at 164. American-Israel Paper Mills were 10 points better at 625. In the oil shares only Delek was in demand. The stock rose 1/2 and 2 more later to 173 1/2. Trade was resumed yesterday in Pex. (The stock proved not to be trading.) The stock opened and closed at 110 — three points lower than on Monday. Export investment remained unchanged at 89 1/2. Discount investment was very firm, and climbed six points to 212. Bank Leumi was 1 1/2 points better at 189 1/2. Union Bank shares yesterday lost a big part of Tuesday's gain. The stock closed at 250, tumbling 16 points. The net rise over two days is nevertheless 10 points. Bank Leumi was one point better at 306, and the ordinary shares of 306. Tefahot Mortgage Bank added four points to 170. Wolfson IL10 remained unchanged at 120. Hasaneh advanced two points (134); but Central Trade lost 2 at 193, and Cial industries was one lower in the variables at 166.

68% of Soviet immigrants are professionals

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter Absorption Minister Natan Peled told the Knesset Labour Committee yesterday that 68 per cent of all immigrants from the Soviet Union are professionals and/or college graduates, and that qualifications of 81 per cent of these are recognized in Israel. Over the first six months of this year, he said, 27,500 immigrants arrived in Israel, as opposed to only 17,900 over the same period last year — an increase of 50 per cent.

Bill would curtail control over Beduin

By HIRSH GOODMAN
Jerusalem Post Staff Reporter

A private member's bill which would limit the wide powers of the Interior Ministry's district representatives over the country's Beduin was referred to the Foreign Affairs and Security Committee yesterday by the consent of Defence Minister Moshe Dayan.

In approving the bill, Mr. Dayan said that he considered the limiting of power "a positive measure." The author of the bill, Prof. Yitzhak Klinghoffer (Gahal), said that the fact that the district representatives rarely, if ever, use their powers, made it logical to abolish this "anti-democratic" ordinance and not leave it on the statute books as a discriminatory measure.

He noted that the Supervision of Beduin Ordinance was promulgated by the British Mandatory Government in 1942. It gave district representatives (then called commissioners) exceptionally wide powers over the presence and movements of Beduin tribes; to detain and interrogate them; to confiscate their possessions; and to judge and sentence them to prison terms.

The only supervisory powers that should be maintained, he believed, are over the movements of the Beduin, to the extent that they are still nomads. The permanent settlement of the Beduin is a praiseworthy project which should be continued, he added.

Prof. Klinghoffer said his bill had reached the Foreign Affairs and Security Committee in the Sixth Knesset, but the Committee could not find the time to complete it before the last elections.

Mr. Dayan flatly denied — in reply to a question from Mr. Shmuel Mikunis (Maki) — that any pressure whatsoever had been exerted on Beduin from the Rafah area to accept Government compensation and drop their demands to have their expropriated lands returned to them.

Replying to a question from Mr. Shmuel Tamir (Fraa Centre), the Defence Minister stated that revenue stamps issued in Judea and Samaria would soon carry Israeli currency markings, and not markings in Jordanian dinars, as has been case up to now.

The question arose after an Israeli lawyer living in Hebron applied for a telephone. When the bill arrived, he was asked to attach a revenue stamp valued at 30 Jordanian fils — this despite the fact that the Israeli lira is also legal tender on the West Bank.

Mr. Dayan explained that up to now the Israel administration in the area had been issuing revenue stamps according to Jordanian currency values. This will soon cease, he said, and the revenue stamps will be issued valued in Israeli currency.

The Defence Minister dismissed as a "hate speech" a motion for the agenda tabled by Mr. Shalom Cohen (Independent), complaining that new immigrants get unfair advantage over veteran Israelis by serving shorter army terms.

Mr. Cohen said he questioned the advisability of the army's decision, instituted six months ago, whereby a new immigrant under the age of 20 was only liable to two years' service, as opposed to three years for other Israelis. The immigrants were thus afforded unfair advantage by being able to get into universities earlier, "instead of risking their lives on the borders," he claimed.

In a 23-word reply, the Defence Minister suggested that the motion be struck from the agenda. It was.

TV show on life of Ezer Weizman is cancelled

Jerusalem Post Reporter

"This Is Your Life" TV programme featuring former O/C Air Force Ezer Weizman — which has already been taped — will not be shown as scheduled later this month, it was decided by the Management Committee of the Broadcasting Authority. It is believed the decision grew out of the feeling that, since Mr. Weizman is a central political figure (currently executive chairman of the Herut Party) there was a risk of "repercussions" if the programme were shown at this time, when early elections are a possibility.

Israel-Liberia aviation talks

LOD AIRPORT. — A two-man Liberian aviation mission arrived here early yesterday for talks in Jerusalem with their Israeli counterparts over revising the Israel-Liberia aviation agreement.

The mission, which came via El Al, consists of Mr. J.S. Montgomery, head of the Liberian Civil Aviation Administration, and Mr. Chikoua, Liberian Minister of Justice. During their four-day stay in Israel they will meet in Jerusalem with a group of Government and El Al officials, including Mr. Nattal Ben-Yehuda of the Civil Aviation Department and Mr. Moshe Eytan of the Foreign Ministry.

Under the Israel-Liberia aviation agreement, in force since 1962, Israel has the right to fly to Liberia's capital, Monrovia, but not to use Liberia as a stop on the way to other points in Africa. With El Al planning to open a regular service to South Africa in September, Israel is now interested in broadening the terms of the agreement.

Javits shows faith in Israel air safety

LOD AIRPORT. — U.S. Senator Jacob K. Javits (Rep. N.Y.), member of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee, arrived here yesterday by El Al from Europe for a three-day visit to Israel.

Senator Javits told reporters at the airport that the main object of his visit was to "demonstrate my faith in the safety of air travel to Israel." He said that during his stay he would meet with Premier Golda Meir, Foreign Minister Abba Eban and Defence Minister Moshe Dayan.

"As a man who has been involved with U.S. policy towards Israel for the past 25 years," the Senator said, "I feel that now — when there are no special problems in the relations between our two countries — is the best time to discuss ideas and study long-range programmes," he said.

In reply to a question concerning allegations about Israel Ambassador Yitzhak Rabin's "interference" in U.S. domestic politics, Mr. Javits said: "I think that all the Ambassador's activities are a matter between him and his Prime Minister. I know him personally and admire and respect him; he is widely respected in the U.S." (Itim)

POLLUTION THREAT AVERTED Huge oil slick moves north toward Lebanon

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

BAT YAM. — A large oil slick that was spotted some 60 kilometers off the coast here early yesterday morning has begun moving away, northward.

Mayor Menahem Rothschild told The Jerusalem Post last night that he had been informed by experts that the slick may be near Lebanon's beaches, but that for the time being — barring any sudden change in wind direction — Israeli beaches are safe.

The slick was spotted by a pilot carrying out routine surveys of the coast for the Ministry of Transport Maritime Division. It was some 10 kilometers long and five kilometers wide.

Mayor Rothschild told The Post that this is not the first time this city's beaches, as well as other beaches along the coast, have been threatened by such oil slicks. He said that most of them originate from the Crete area, which is the last one in the Mediterranean in which oil tankers are allowed to spill waste and superfluous oil. This practice, he contended, is a major source of pollution for this area of the Mediterranean.

VERDICT DUE ON TUESDAY Giora Neumann takes the stand

TEL AVIV. — Giora Neumann, the 18-year-old Ramat Aviv youth on trial for refusing to complete his induction into the army, told the Jaffa military court yesterday that he does not feel he has broken the law, because he sees the I.D.F. "an army of conquest."

As a group of about 20 Matzpen and Rakah youths, joined by entertainer Dan Ben Amotz, demonstrated outside the building, Neumann told the three-man court that he had been brought up to love his fellow man and that I.D.F. activities in the area amounted to "oppression, degradation and expulsion." He claimed that I.D.F. operations in Gaza in 1971 (when the refugee camps were cleared out) were typical examples of oppression practised by the army throughout the territories.

Neumann, who, three months before he was due for induction, was one of three youths who wrote Defence Minister Dayan that they would not serve, declared that he had later decided that total refusal of service would be unfair to others. He said that, on April 15 (after six months of detention), he made an offer to accept alternate service if he was exempted from swearing allegiance to the army — but that this was not accepted.

The court, presided over by Sgan-Aluf David Gershon, set next Tuesday for the next session, at which it will announce its verdict. The other two judges are Rav-Seren Elyahu Maza and Seren Binyamin Gilad. (Itim)

'Moms nag daughters to early sexual relations'

By MACABEE DEAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Israeli mothers have a strong tendency to "nag their 18-year-old daughters into having sexual relations," Dr. Ruth Navon, of the Tel Aviv Municipality's School Health Service, yesterday told the first International Symposium on Sex Education. The four-day symposium ends today.

Mrs. Navon said that girls, some only 15, complained to her that if they wanted to stay home in the evening and listen to records or read a book, their mothers would ask: "Why aren't you out having a good time with a boy?"

The mothers, Dr. Navon said, feared their daughters would be old maids.

Dr. Zev Segal, director of community work in the Haifa Municipality's Social Welfare Department, added later: "The Israeli mother is miserable if her teenage girl doesn't have a boyfriend."

Mrs. Ilga K. Stulman reported on the work of a team which runs a community sex information telephone service in New York. Mrs. Stulman said callers were not required to identify themselves. The office was open five days a week, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., "and we are trying to get a money to keep it open seven days a week 24 hours a day."

The speaker was asked what she would tell a teenage girl who called up to ask: "If I don't let my boyfriend go all the way he will leave me. What should I do?"

"I would tell her," said Mrs. Stulman, "that it was her decision to make, but I would try to clarify some things for her. Did she really love the boy, or was she in love with the idea of being in love? Did she know that sex was more of an emotional than a physical commitment, and was she old enough to undertake such a commitment? If she wanted me to, I would give her contraceptive information."

INFORMATION

The service provided information on where abortions could be obtained; birth control; jays making venereal disease, homosexuality, early sexual experiences, sex outside of marriage, how to tell children about sex, and masturbation.

Dr. Gunter Schmidt, of the Institute for Sexual Information at the University of Hamburg, gave statistics showing an increasing percentage of youngsters having sexual relations before the age of 16.

Prof. Fumio Yamada, of Osaka City University, said it was not so much a permissive society, as the simple biological fact that youngsters now matured sexually much faster — probably due to better nutrition — that sex life started earlier.

Girl, 3, killed by truck driven by her father

GAZA. — A three-year-old girl was killed here on Tuesday when she was run over by a truck driven by her own father.

Salem Shikha had just started his truck, which had been parked in the yard of his home, when he heard a scream. He got out to look and found the body of his daughter, Sabah, who had been playing unattended under the front wheel of the truck.

The police are investigating.

Driver gets 18 months for fatal accident

Jerusalem Post Reporter

BEERSHEVA. — A Rishon LeZion man who caused the death of two persons while driving without a licence or insurance was yesterday sentenced to 18 months in jail, fined IL5,000 and barred from taking out a driver's licence for five years.

The man, Amram Ballia, 36, was driving a private car, with four passengers in it, on the Dimona-Yerushalem road last July 15. At a sharp bend, he swerved to the left and hit an oncoming car driven by Elihu Cohen of Kiryat Hayovel in Jerusalem. Cohen and a passenger in Ballia's car, Yair Nehum, of Rishon LeZion, were killed on the spot.

Ballia claimed in court that Yair Nehum had been behind the wheel at the time of the accident. But his version was contradicted by the other three passengers, who said he was the driver.

Ballia's jail term was deferred for six weeks because his wife is due to give birth shortly. He was released on IL100,000 bail.

On the bench were District Court President Shlomo Elkayam and Judges Meir Volinsky and Avraham Malul. (Itim)

Bomb damages Jaffa house

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — A bomb exploded in a house on Sderot Yerushalaim in Jaffa at about 1 a.m. yesterday. No one was injured, but the blast caused damage estimated at about IL1,000, mainly in the kitchen. Several windows in an adjoining building were also broken.

The police believe that the 300-gram explosives charge was planted by persons from the underworld, to settle accounts with the owner of the house, who is "known to the police." They did not identify him.

Foreign Trade Bank to be taken over by Ist Nat'l Bank

Jerusalem Post Economic Editor

TEL AVIV. — An extraordinary general meeting of the Foreign Trade Bank will take place on July 12 to approve the closing of the bank and transfer of all its assets and liabilities to the First International Bank of Israel (a holding company) — slated to become one of the major banks in this country.

F.I.B.I. was expected to start operations on January 1, 1972, but the scheme was delayed owing to a number of snags. The bank's registered share capital will amount to IL200m.

JAPANESE EMISSARY — Mr. Seibi Ota, chief of the Foreign Affairs Department of the Japanese Red Cross Society, seen shortly after his arrival at Lod Airport yesterday morning for a five-day visit to Israel.

A Magen David Adom official told The Jerusalem Post that Mr. Ota had come here to discuss with MDA the best ways of "expressing the sympathies of the Japanese people to the People of Israel regarding the Lod Airport tragedy" of May 30. (Castro photo)

A 12-year-old boy from Jerusalem was fatally injured yesterday when he fell from a scaffold at a building site in Bethlechem.

Police are investigating. (Itim)

COALITION CRISIS

to rebuild the Labour-Mapam Alignment if it collapsed. This was tantamount to telling Mrs. Meir that the rebel majority in Mapam which brooked no compromise on civil marriage would not regret splitting the Alignment and quitting the Coalition.

Two N.R.P. ministers, Dr. Yosef Burg and Mr. Michael Chazani, met with Mrs. Meir, but the third N.R.P. minister, Dr. Zerah Warhaftig, was apparently not contacted due to some secretarial oversight at the Prime Minister's Office. Dr. Warhaftig will attend the second round this morning.

Questioned as they went in, Dr. Burg said he could not predict the way the talks would go, while Mr. Chazani said that his party had been flexible as it could be — apparently a reference to its willingness to abstain on the Aguda.

"Who's a Jew" bill as compared with Mapam's insistence on actually voting for the I.L.P. civil marriage measure.

The two Ministers said they could not possibly vote against the Aguda measure, not only on grounds of conscience (because of its Halachic implications) but also because of the N.R.P.'s heart-searching over the Law of Return as amended two years ago. Mr. Chazani told The Post later: "I hope we'll overcome the crisis smoothly. I'm optimistic."

Most of the Meir-N.R.P. talk was devoted to a statement of the N.R.P. position and Mrs. Meir reportedly made only a brief reply. Israel Broadcasting said late last night that Mrs. Meir told the N.R.P. Ministers that the Labour Party Leader, Shimon Peres, would have to decide whether the N.R.P. could abstain on the Aguda bill.

(The Leadership Bureau will be swelled in size today by the addition of all the Labour ministers and the Labour members of the Alignment faction Executive.)

PRICE RISES

The Public Committee on Prices yesterday recommended price rises on butter, hard cheese, sweet cream and tea, but decided to leave milk and other dairy products at their present price levels.

The new prices, which go into effect today, mean that a 100-gram package of butter will now cost 80 instead of 75 agorot, and a 200-gram package IL1.50 instead of IL1.40. Hard cheese will go up by about IL1.00 per-kilo, and a container of sweet cream will now cost IL1.30 instead of 95 agorot.

The new price for a 100-gram package of loose tea will be IL1.27 instead of IL1.17, and one-gram teabags will go up to 5 agorot from the present 3 agorot price.

Gaza students back for summer holiday

Jerusalem Post Reporter

GAZA. — A group of about 315 young Gazans studying in Egypt crossed the Suez at Kantara yesterday to spend the summer with family and friends in the Gaza Strip.

The crossing was the second in a series of four, which will bring in a total of 2,000 Strip students this year. The visits are being made under the Summer Visit Scheme, which Israel allows residents of neighbouring Arab states to spend their vacations with relatives in Israel and the territories.

Another 300-odd students are expected to make the crossing today, and an initial 350 returned on Monday. The last of the 2,000 will come over on July 26.

Falsified private hospital's earnings

TEL AVIV. — The proprietor of a private local hospital, who concealed five-sixths of his 1970 income, was sentenced here yesterday to six months in jail and a IL20,000 fine.

The 67-year-old physician, Dr. Leazar Katz, runs the Ein Gedi private hospital here. He was convicted of declaring only IL20,800 in earnings for 1970. Judge Hadassa Ben-Itz of Tel Aviv District Court also found Dr. Katz guilty of keeping false books in order to conceal his income. (Itim)
